

the light of day (June Hayward)	Does the way that it's credited matter as much as the fact that, without me, the book might never see the light of day? / I can't let Athena's greatest work go to print in its shoddy, first-draft state.	Amn (June Hayward)	It's not all about pandering to authority / I do think we've made the book better, more accessible, more streamlined. The original draft made you feel... alienated at times, and frustrated with the self-righteousness of it. All that made it all the most amazing thing about Athena. The new version is a universally readable story, a story that anyone can see themselves in.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text expresses defensive self-justification and critical judgment through the rhetorical question that minimizes concern and the harsh evaluation of Athena's work as "shoddy, first-draft state." The tone conveys underlying guilt, rationalization, and disapproval rather than positive or neutral sentiment.	"sentiment." "Positive." "justification." The text expresses approval and satisfaction with the revised work. Linguistic cues include positive comparative adjectives ("better, more accessible, more streamlined"), the rhetorical question, and the characterization of Athena's work as "shoddy, first-draft state." The tone conveys underlying guilt, rationalization, and disapproval rather than positive or neutral sentiment.	Strongly Negative The text expresses a strong negative sentiment, likely due to the perceived lack of originality and the author's self-criticism. The tone is one of disappointment and disapproval. nub shoulders (June Hayward)	She doesn't name-drop, doesn't blurb or recommend her colleagues' books, and doesn't publicly rub shoulders in that ostentatious, desperate way we know carter writers do. In the entire time I've ever known her, I've never heard her reference any close friends but me.	sofball (Juniper Song)	I'm a Serious Young Author, I'm a Literary Star: I finish reading to enthusiastic applause. The OAA goes equally wild. The audience goes other apbly, which give me a chance to show off ("How did you balance research for such a niche historical topic with your day job?") How did you make the historical setting feel so rich and real?") or badly flustering ("Is Athena so into your grounded while being so successful of such a recent job?") Did you feel any pressure after receiving such a major book deal?	"sentiment." "Neutral." "justification." The text presents observational and descriptive statements about Athena's behavior without explicit emotional judgment. While phrases like "ostentatious, desperate way" carry slight negative connotations, the overall focus remains on factual description of Athena's character traits.	"sentiment." "Strongly Positive." "justification." The text conveys extreme satisfaction and triumphant self-perception. Linguistic cues include the capitalized phrase "Serious Young Author and Literary Star," the rhetorical question, and the characterization of Athena's work as "shoddy, first-draft state." The tone conveys underlying guilt, rationalization, and disapproval rather than positive or neutral sentiment.	Negative Перечисление действий, которые характерны для многих начинающих авторов, но которые у Athena с собой никак не связаны. Автор снисходительно относится к авторам, которые так себя ведут. В то же время автор снисходительно относится к авторам, которые так себя ведут. В то же время автор снисходительно относится к авторам, которые так себя ведут.	Negative В данном контексте выражение, обозначающее "nub shoulders", является не проявлением интереса к личности, а унизительным высказыванием. Автор снисходительно относится к авторам, которые так себя ведут. В то же время автор снисходительно относится к авторам, которые так себя ведут.
leave me out in the cold (Juniper Song)	Near the end of the party, I ran into my former editor while standing in line at the coat check. He comes for me for a hug like we're best friends, like he didn't butcher my very first book baby, set it up to fail, and then leave me out in the cold.	icky (Harvey - producer's assistant)	"Thanks for most understanding." Justin beams. "We talk to authors sometimes, and they—they know. They're very picky," says Harvey. "They want very serious, very serious to match the book, for word for word." And they don't get that it's a totally different medium, and requires different storytelling skills," says Justin.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text expresses resentment and bitter criticism through the contrast between the editor's warm greeting ("hug like we're best friends") and the speaker's recollection of mistreatment ("butcher my very first book baby"). The tone is one of bitterness and disapproval, escalating to outright anger, fitting the Negative category.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text conveys mild criticism and condescension toward Athena from the editor. Linguistic cues include the dismissive characterization "They're very picky" and the patronizing observation "They don't get that my first book baby" is a totally different medium. The speaker identifies themselves as professionally superior ("We talk to authors sometimes, and they—you know, they're very serious"). The tone is one of condescension and disapproval, fitting the Negative category. throw them to the wolves... (throw to the dogs) (Daniella Woodhouse)	"I said I don't have the bag space for print books, but she could have her agent send an epub file to mine. Of course I'll never open it." Jen makes a whoosh noise with her lips. "Straight into the trash." They all chuckle. "Diplomatic," says Heidi. "You say yes to me," says Mattie. "They're not getting marketing support, poor things." "Yes, it's a real pity," sighs Daniella. "I hate watching these small presses acquire good novels just to throw them to the wolves." "It's diabolical," says Jen.	ick-measuring (Juniper Song)	Suddenly now, I'm important enough to acknowledge. Now, guys sit on me and buy me drinks at the bar. (We call her gatherings at literary events "barcons" - watering holes for people who have been waiting for years to rub shoulders and get into the "in" crowd - contests over their advances and print list.)	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text expresses criticism and disapproval of publishing practices through phrases like "throw them to the wolves" and "diabolical." While the speaker uses hyperbole ("I'm important enough to acknowledge"), the overall tone is one of bitterness and disapproval, fitting the Negative category.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text conveys a sustained, vehement denunciation of Athena's character and motivations. warmabe (Athena Liu)	Athena never made efforts to send the ladder down to her fellow writers of color. If anything, she found them annoying. "My inbox keeps filling up with... writers who think I'll spend hours writing them advice letters just because we have the same vaguely ethnic background," she'd complain contemptuously.	out of touch (Juniper Song)	And on and on for sixteen hours, culminating in a linked Google Doc with more evidence of Athena's crimes. Athena, (No)KoreanNoGoals concludes, was a... with most radical Asian diaspora movement. Athena was not a real Marxist, she was a champagne socialist at best. Athena lied about her family history to make us feel more tragic than it was—I for convenience, for claims to authenticity, for attention. Athena, like Maxine Hong Kingston, always presented the worst of Chinese history and culture to milk sympathy from her white audience.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text conveys criticism and contempt through phrases like "warmabe writer" and the cynical observation "the content suggests performative concern rather than genuine distress." The tone is one of bitterness and disapproval, fitting the Negative category without escalating to intense outrage.	"sentiment." "Strongly Negative." "justification." The text conveys a sustained, vehement denunciation of Athena's character and motivations. wannabe (Juniper Song)	Maybe she's one of those wannabe writers delighting in an underdog, underrepresented publishing giant staff member with a China-inspired manuscript of her own, and she's jealous I've made it big when she hasn't. I get that—in publishing, that's a universal dynamic.	had it coming (Juniper Song)	Athena is such a perfect target. She was too pretty, too successful, too suspiciously clean to have nothing on her back. She'd be coming for me, and I'm sure some blowback like that would have happened sooner or later, even if she hadn't choked to death on a pancake pancake.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text expresses dismissiveness and condescension through phrases like "wannabe writer" and the cynical observation "the content suggests performative concern rather than genuine distress." The tone is one of bitterness and disapproval, fitting the Negative category without escalating to intense outrage.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." spilling into the pits of despair (June Hayward)	Writing is such a solitary activity. You have no assurance that what you're creating has any value, and any indication that you're behind in it. You're alone, you're alone, you're alone. Keep your eyes on your own paper, they say.	gets dragged into the mud, (drag someone's name through the mud) (Juniper Song)	In a perverse way, this is very good for me. The more Athena you dragged into the mud, the more confusing this whole thing seems, which would have happened sooner or later, even if she hadn't choked to death on a pancake pancake.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text expresses anxiety, pessimism, and frustration about the writing process through phrases like "solitary activity" and the cynical observation "the content suggests performative concern rather than genuine distress." The tone is one of bitterness and disapproval, fitting the Negative category without escalating to intense outrage.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." spike in my heart rate (June Hayward)	Jealousy is the spike in my heart rate when I glimpse news of Athena's nights on Twitter—either book contract, awards nomination, special editions, foreign rights deals.	in her own right (Juniper Song)	New Athena is a pretentious snob, a mayhemist (or so one can really make up their minds on this), a defiant Lisa Chan (or not, the most confusing this whole thing seems, which would have happened sooner or later, even if she hadn't choked to death on a pancake pancake). me by my name (June Hayward)	I'll be derided for days, unable to focus on my own work, rained by shame and self-disgust every time I see one of her books in a bookstore display.	road to literary stardom (Juniper Song)	For Athena, the Northstar deal was not a life-changing event, any other. Rather in her cap, one of the side parts of the road to literary stardom she's been hurtling down since graduation.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." The text expresses intense personal distress through terms like "derided for days" and "self-disgust." The tone is one of bitterness and disapproval, fitting the Negative category without escalating to intense outrage.	"sentiment." "Neutral." "justification." The text is predominantly observational and descriptive, presenting the Northstar deal as a factual, unremarkable milestone in Athena's career. Linguistic cues include the dismissive characterization "any other" and the cynical observation "the content suggests performative concern rather than genuine distress." The tone is one of bitterness and disapproval, fitting the Negative category.	Negative The text expresses a negative sentiment, likely due to the perceived lack of originality and the author's self-criticism. The tone is one of disappointment and disapproval. manuscript sits like a hot sack of coals (June Hayward)	Meanwhile, in my bag, tossed at the floor of my desk, Athena's manuscript sits like a hot sack of coals.	satisfies you at every turn (June Hayward)	It's hard, after all, to be friends with someone who makes you feel like a loser. Probably no one else can stand Athena because they can't stand constantly failing to measure up to her.	"sentiment." "Negative." "justification." leave a hole in my life (June Hayward)	Athena was only a friend, not a close friend. I feel like a bitch saying it, but she just wasn't that important to me, and she doesn't leave a hole in my life that I now need to hold detours around. I don't feel the same lack, suffocating loss I did when my father died.	serial sex pest (June Hayward)	one of whom would soon be ousted on Twitter as a serial sex pest , stared eagerly at her chest. "Oh my God," she kept saying. "I'm not ready for this. It's all going to blow up in my face. I'm not ready."	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses guilt, defensiveness, and emotional distress through phrases like 'I feel like a bitch saying it' and the stark comparison to paternal loss. The speaker's admission that Athena 'wasn't that important' doesn't leave a hole carries an undertone of self-reproach and rationalization rather than neutrality or approval, fitting the Negative category."	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses anxiety, dread, and self-doubt. Linguistic cues include the repeated phrase 'I'm not ready' (explicit denial of preparedness), the catastrophic prediction 'It's all going to blow up in my face' (anticipation of public failure), and the exclamation 'Oh my God' (emotional distress). The surrounding context mentioning a 'serial sex pest' adds a layer of discomfort and grim irony, but the speaker's own sentiment remains one of fearful apprehension rather than outrage or neutrality." words burn like coals inside my chest (June Hayward)	I work so damn hard on it, I write every day from dawn to past midnight. I've never worked so hard on any writing piece before, not even my debut novel . These words burn like coals inside my chest, and the results horrified me when Melinda sent them in.	tormented (as a "type") (June Hayward)	only from the right angles and lighting, so I tried for the next best thing, which is "torment" in a very deep and brilliant way." It's hard to transmute those thoughts to the camera, though, and the results horrified me when Melinda sent them in.	"Sentiment: "Positive". "Justification": "The text expresses intense creative drive and satisfaction through phrases like 'I work so damn hard' and the metaphor 'words burn like coals inside my chest, fueling me.' Despite the consuming, almost painful imagery, the overall tone conveys purposeful energy, engagement and a sense of purposeful energy, fitting the Positive category without escalating to extreme enthusiasm."	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses dissatisfaction and self-criticism regarding the photographs. Linguistic cues include the admission of photographing a friend persona ('tormented in a very deep and brilliant way'), the difficulty of achieving the desired effect ('It's hard to transmute those thoughts to the camera'), and the strong negative reaction 'horrified me upon seeing the results.' The sentiment is one of disappointment and discomfort without escalating to outrage."	Negative	Negative inherited a sketch (June Hayward)	It's not so awful as it sounds. Plagiarism is an easy way out, the way you cheat when you can't string words together on your own. But what I did was not art. I did rewrite most of the book. It's not like I took a painting and passed it off as my own. I inherited a sketch , with colors added by my unseen patches, and finished it according to the style of the original.	mere mortals (June Hayward)	Athena is so stupidly, ridiculously successful that it makes sense she would want to mingle with mere mortals . Athena, presumably, chats exclusively with blue check holders and fellow bestselling authors who can orient her with their rarefied observations on modern society.	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text reveals defensive rationalization and underlying guilt through the narrator's attempt to distinguish her actions from plagiarism's while simultaneously minimizing the ethical breach. Phrases like 'cheat when you can't string words together' and the need to 'justify the labor (I did rewrite most of the book)' convey unease and self-justification rather than neutrality or approval. The tone is defensive and uneasy, fitting the Negative category."	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses resentment and sarcastic criticism through exaggerated language. Linguistic cues include the intensifying adverb 'ridiculously', 'successful' framing achievement as excessive or absurd), the dismissive contrast between Athena and 'mere mortals' (implying elitism), and the sarcastic speculation about her exclusive social circle ('blue check holders', 'rarefied observations'). The tone conveys bitterness and disapproval rather than neutral observation."	Strongly Negative: т.е. "no", "inherited a sketch" а также контекст является самопринятием гордости (plagiarism). Кроме того, упоминается выделение персонажа Джун.	Negative sharpening gems, trimming away rough patches to let them shine (June Hayward)	The words come easily to me – revisions are usually like pulling teeth, but I'm having fun with this. I'm having more fun with writing than I have in years. Maybe because it's someone else's words I'm chopping, so I don't feel like I'm killing my darling, no. Maybe because the raw material is so good, and I feel like I'm sharpening gems, trimming away the rough patches to let them shine .	punching bag (June Hayward)	Deep down, I've always suspected Athena likes my company precisely because I can't read her. I understand her world, but I'm not a threat, and her achievements are so far out of my reach that she doesn't feel speaking to my face about her work. Don't we all need someone we can treat as a punching bag ?	"Sentiment: "Positive". "Justification": "The text expresses enjoyment and creative satisfaction through phrases like 'I'm having fun with this' and 'more fun with writing than I have in years'. The metaphor of 'sharpening gems' conveys a sense of productive, fulfilling work. Despite the acknowledgment of difficulty (like pulling teeth), the overall tone is one of pleasure and engagement, fitting the Positive category."	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses self-deprecating resentment and critical resignation. Linguistic cues include 'Deep down, I've always suspected' (implying a painful self-awareness), the characterization of Athena as 'someone used for emotional venting'. The metaphorical question 'Don't we all need someone we can treat as a punching bag?' conveys bitter irony rather than acceptance, fitting the Negative category."	Negative: Здесь упоминается самоанализ Джун, и ключевые слова являются: "Because it's someone else's words I'm chopping", "люблю эти слова - слова Афины, а сам процесс, то не очень нравится" оптимизация за них.	Strongly Negative: В разговорной речи punching bag, при описании человека является выражением уничижительной оценки человека. Derogation in Collins dictionary: "informal a person serving as an object of abuse, scorn, etc." Сатира характеризуется пренебрежительным тоном, а также является Джун и Афины.
find the diamond from the rough (June Hayward)	I've labored for years to burn my craft. Perhaps the core idea of this novel wasn't mine, but I'm the one who rescued it, who find the diamond in the rough . But the thing is, no one will ever understand how much I put into this novel.	larger than life (June Hayward)	"Athena was shining ," I say, and I do mean it. "She was larger than life . Unshakable. Looking at her was like looking at the sun. She was so brilliant that it hurt to stare for too long." I suffer through half an hour of the wake before I make up an excuse to leave—I can only take so much poignant Chinese food and old people who can't or won't speak in English. Mrs. Liu presses against me, stifling, as I say my goodbyes.	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses defensiveness, frustration, and a sense of unrecognized effort through phrases like 'no one will ever understand how much I put into this novel'. The narrator acknowledges the core idea isn't hers ('wasn't mine') but justifies her actions through self-aggrandizing terminology ('rescued it', 'burn the diamond from the rough'). The underlying tone is one of anxious self-justification and articulated resentment, fitting the Negative category."	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text contains a stark contrast between the effusive praise for Athena and the narrator's private, dismissive thoughts about the wake. Linguistic cues for the negative sentiment include 'I suffer through half an hour', 'I can only take so much pungent Chinese food and old people who can't or won't speak in English', and the need to 'make up an excuse to leave'. While the quoted eulogy is 'Strongly Positive', the surrounding narrative voice is one of discontent, irritation, and alienation, which defines the overall sentiment of the passage."	Strongly Negative: В данном контексте описан процесс самоанализа, название работы, ключевые слова являются: Джун, удачи, анализ.	Negative well-oiled machine (Juniper Song)	So when it was my turn to release a novel, I had wild expectations that publishing would do the same thing for me and Over the Sycamore, that some well-oiled machine would build my public persona without my lifting a finger, that the marketing department would take me by the hand and coach me on precisely the right things to wear and say.	it has to gestic inside me (Athena Liu)	No beta readers. No interviews, no sharing snippets on social media. Even her agents and editors don't get to see so much as an outline until she's finished the whole thing. It has to be inside me so until it's viable," she told me once. "If I expose it to the world before it's fully formed, it dies."	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses disappointment and disillusionment through the phrase 'well-oiled expectations' and the implied contrast between anticipated hype and reality. The description of a 'well-oiled machine' and being 'coached' carries a tone of naive hope now recognized as unrealistic, conveying mild criticism and dissatisfaction without intense anger."	"Sentiment: "Neutral". "Justification": "The text is a reported statement describing Athena's creative process and personal philosophy regarding her work. It presents her methodology and metaphorical justification ('gestate inside me' before it's fully formed, it doesn't without explicit emotional coloring from the narrator. While the imagery involves life and death stakes, the passage itself is presented as a factual recounting of Athena's words, lacking clear positive or negative sentiment indicators from the speaker's perspective."	Negative	Neutral snowballs (Juniper Song)	Bert's wrong. This won't blow over. Twitter scandals are like snowballs, the more people that see it, the more who feel it's necessary to weigh in with their own opinions and agendas, creating an explosion of discourse branching off the originating conversation.	magpie's eye for suffering (Juniper Song)	Athena had a magpie's eye for suffering . This skill united all her best-reviewed works. She could see through the glare and sledge of facts and details to the part of the story that bled. She collected true narratives like snowballs, polished them off, and presented them, sharp and gleaming, to horrified and entranced readers.	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses anxiety and pessimism through the metaphor of a 'snowball' and the prediction of an 'explosion of discourse'. The dismissal of Bert's reassurance ('Bert's wrong') and the focus on escalating conflict convey worry and criticism rather than neutrality or approval, fitting the Negative category without intense outrage."	"Sentiment: "Positive". "Justification": "The text expresses admiration for Athena's literary talent through vivid, approving metaphors. Linguistic cues include 'magpie's eye for suffering' (suggesting keen instinct and curiosity), 'polished them off', 'sharp and gleaming' (improvement for craft). The final description of readers as 'horrified and entranced' underscores the powerful, effective impact of her work. While the subject matter involves suffering, the speaker's sentiment toward Athena's skill is one of respect and approval."	Negative	Negative blood in the water (Juniper Song)	The Athena-June scandal, as it's being now referred to, has become the Discourse of the Moment. This is wholly different from the Lily Wu discourse, which involved young people at most. This time, there's blood in the water . Silence isn't an option. Everyone has to declare a side, or they're accused of complicity (SMH) at so many supposed all-party listening silent now that their friend's been exposed, tweet anonymous accounts happily stirring the pot.)	dead mouse (June Hayward)	Athena, the dead mouse . And I, the grieving friend, haunted by her quiet, unable to write without invoking her voice. See, who ever said I wasn't a good storyteller?	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text describes a public controversy using dramatic, predatory metaphors like 'blood in the water' and notes the forced participation ('Everyone has to declare a side, or they're accused of complicity'). The parenthetical aside about 'posting my head' expresses disappointment by silent allies, while 'tipping the pot' criticizes anonymous instigators. The overall tone is one of weary cynicism, social dynamics, and the narrator's feeling of being trapped in a volatile situation, fitting the Negative category."	"Sentiment: "Positive". "Justification": "The text expresses self-criticism and ironic amusement at the narrator's own narrative framing. Linguistic cues include the theatrical, self-aware construction 'Athena, the dead mouse. And I, the grieving friend' (playing my head) followed by the rhetorical question 'See, who ever said I wasn't a good storyteller?' which signals pride and cleverness. The sentiment is one of smug approval rather than genuine grief or enthusiasm, fitting the Positive category due to its self-congratulatory tone."	Strongly Negative: Здесь Джун отсылается на ситуацию: Лили Ву, которая была беременна, а в ней она была убит, "Blood in the water" (крас в воде) "отсылка на правду и расправу в отношении преступника" и при этом подыгрывает.	Negative: Обращение, такое же как и Джун, так же приспосабливая чужой опыт себе, собирая его, как детали. Сравнивая, критикуя, делая из истории очередной данный материал, подталкивая к своему, личному опыту Афины.
sticking my head in the sand (Juniper Song)	Jen keeps reminding me. What's on the internet can't hurt you if you don't look at it. But that doesn't feel like a cliché; it feels like sticking my head in the sand while everything is falling down around me. I can't ignore the damage. I have to track the exact trajectory of the hurricane, because knowing the precise moment it'll hit and where will make things hurt less. At least, my brain is convinced this is so.	eating her heart out (Marnie Kimball)	The nominations trickle in one by one: Goodreads Choice Awards, check, the Indies Choice Book Awards, check. The Booker Prize and the Women's Prize are long shots, so I'm not too disappointed when I don't make the short list for those. Besides, I'm nominated for so many regional awards that I'm swimming in attention regardless. Adèle Sparks-Sato is eating her heart out , says Marnie when I share the Goodreads Choice Awards news.	"Sentiment: "Negative". "Justification": "The text expresses anxiety, helplessness, and compulsive distress through metaphors like 'sticking my head in the sand' and 'track the exact trajectory of the hurricane'. The narrator needs reassurance ('Jen keeps reminding me') and describes a state of overwhelming despair ('my brain is convinced this is so') driven by fear of impending disaster. The tone conveys significant emotional turmoil and dissatisfaction without escalating to explicit outrage, fitting the Negative category."	"Sentiment: "Positive". "Justification": "The text expresses satisfaction and pride regarding award nominations, tempered by realistic expectations. Linguistic cues include the casual, confident listing of achievements ('Check the Indies Choice Book Awards, check'), the pragmatic acceptance of 'regional awards' (signaling realistic goals), and the celebratory detail of the 'schadenfreude-laced text' (Adèle Sparks-Sato is 'eating her heart out') adding a layer of smug pleasure, confirming a positive, self-satisfied sentiment overall." gum-chewing, braces-wearing (June Hayward)	My boss is annoyed, and the parents who booked gum-chewing, braces-wearing right now. I simply cannot. Last week I watched a friend thrash around on the ground until she died. I snup when a mother calls me to complain.	finger in development hell (Juniper Song)	I try to temper my expectations. After all, the vast majority of options didn't make it. All that an option means is that the production company has exclusive rights to package the story into something a studio might want to buy. The vast majority of projects linger in development hell , and very few ever get green-lit by studio executives.	"Sentiment: "Strongly Negative". "Justification": "The text conveys intense emotional distress and anger through the pejorative description of students as 'gum-chewing, braces-wearing brats.' The emphatic refusal ('I simply cannot'), and the explosive, traumatic retort ('I snup') recounting a friend's violent death. This language reflects outrage, severe frustration, and a complete breakdown of composure, fitting the Strongly Negative category."	"Sentiment: "Neutral". "Justification": "The text is a factual, cautionary explanation of how gelatinous death functions in the publishing and film industries. Linguistic cues include the pragmatic self-admonition 'I try to temper my expectations' and the objective, statistical framing ('vast majority', 'very few'). The tone is one of sober realism intended to manage potential disappointment, lacking clear positive or negative emotional expression about the current situation."
