Контекст

| Начинающие литераторы | | Литературные знаменитости | |
|---|---|---|---|
| par for the course (June Hayward) | My editor was fired during one of those publishing squeezes that happen every time the economy dips, and I got passed along to some guy named Garrett who has so far shown so little interest in supporting the novel that I often wonder whether he's forgotten about me entirely. But that's par for the course, everyone told me. Everyone has a shitty debut experience. | to my face (June Hayward) | Deep down, I've always suspected Athena likes my company precisely because I can't rival her. I understand her world, but I'm not a threat, and her achievements are so far out of my reach that she doesn't feel bad squealing to my face about her wins. |
| balls get dropped (June Hayward) | It's always chaos in New York, all the editors and publicists are overworked and underpaid, and balls get dropped all the time. | in black and white (Juniper Song) | We'd known from the preorder numbers that my hitting the list was likelier than not, but seeing the evidence printed in black and white sends me into paroxysms of delight. Here is my stamp of approval. I'm a bestselling writer. |
| The grass is never greener on the other side (June Hayward) | The grass is never greener on the other side. Every author hates their imprint. There are no Cinderella stories—just hard work, tenacity, and repeat attempts at the golden ticket. | twist the knife (Juniper Song) | And then, because I'm irritated now and because I want to twist the knife, "She really gets my vision, you know, in a way that's wonderfully collaborative. I've never worked with someone so incisive before. |
| right off the bat (Juniper Song) | Are these the signs of a bestseller in the making? I wonder. They must be. Why doesn't anyone tell you, right off the bat, how important your book is to the publisher? | blow up in my face (Athena Liu) | "I'm not ready for this. It's all going to blow up in my face. I'm not ready. Do you think they hate me? Do you think everyone secretly hates me, and no one will tell me? |
| worked my ass off (Juniper Song) | Before Over the Sycamore came out, I worked my ass off doing blog interviews and podcasts, hoping that the more sweat I put into publicity, the more my publisher would reward my efforts. But now, I see, author efforts have nothing to do with a book's success. | raking over the coals (Juniper Song) | An online raking over the coals feels like a rite of passage every notable author must now undergo. |
| dead in the water (June Hayward) | Kimberly, like everyone else, had known early on that my debut was dead in the water. She just didn't have the heart to say it to my face. | in hot water (Juniper Song) | And Marnie Kimball, Daniella's favorite author, has gotten in hot water at least a dozen times, always for tweeting something edgy and indefensible, like The classics are just better and if you don't get them, you don't know how to read. |
| a dime a dozen (Athena Liu) | ""Hi Miss Liu, I'm a sophomore in high school, and as a fellow Asian American woman I admire you so much.' Shut up. You're not special; you're a dime a dozen." | off the cuff (Juniper Song) | I've forgotten about my stilted, prewritten answers; I'm going completely off the cuff now, and every word out of my mouth is clever, adorable, engaging. I'm killing it. |
| IN PLAIN SIGHT (June Hayward) | If news ever breaks that Athena wrote the first draft, the whole world will look at all the work I did, all those beautiful sentences I produced, and all they'll ever see is Athena Liu. But no one ever has to know, do they? THE BEST WAY TO HIDE A LIE IS IN PLAIN SIGHT. | behind closed doors (Juniper Song) | Gatekeepers sit on manuscripts for months, and meetings happen behind closed doors while you're dying from anticipation on the outside. Publishing means no news for weeks, until you're standing in line at Starbucks or waiting for the bus, and your phone pings with the email that will change your life. |
| in the clear (June Hayward) | For a few weeks, it all feels like I'm in the clear. No one asks questions about how I came to my source material. No one seems to even have known what Athena was working on. | jump ship (Juniper Song) | We all nod and sip our wine, relieved that we are not part of the unfortunate masses. The conversation moves on to the latest independent publisher that's recently laid off half its staff, including all but one senior editor, and whether the writers in their stable should try their luck in the imminent shuffle or try to get their rights reverted and jump ship to another house. Publishing gossip, it turns out, is a lot of fun when you're speculating about other people's misfortune. |

You are a linguist specializing in sentiment analysis. Your task is to analyze the sentiment of the following text extracted from the novel "Yellowface" by R. Kuang.

Categories:
1. Strongly Positive:The text expresses enthusiasm, praise, or extreme satisfaction.
2. Positive: The text expresses approval, contentment, or general satisfaction without intense emotion.
3. Neutral: The text is objective, factual, or expresses no discernible emotional leaning.
4. Negative: The text expresses dissatisfaction, criticism, or disapproval without intense emotion.
5. Strongly Negative: The text expresses outrage, severe criticism, or extreme frustration.

Instructions:
- Output must be a valid JSON object.
- Do not include any text outside the JSON object.
- For sarcasm or irony, analyze the intended meaning rather than the literal words.
- If the sentiment is ambiguous, default to "Neutral" and note the ambiguity in your justification.

Text:
{{ And Marnie Kimball, Daniella's favorite author, has gotten in hot water at least a dozen times, always for tweeting something edgy and indefensible, like The classics are just better and if you don't get them, you don't know how to read.}}

Output Format:
{
"sentiment": "[Category]",
"justification": "[Brief explanation citing specific linguistic cues]"
}

| Начинающие литераторы | Литературные знаменитости |
|---|---|
| {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses dissatisfaction and frustration through phrases like 'so little interest,' 'forgotten about me entirely,' and the resigned acceptance of a 'shitty debut experience,' which convey criticism and mild bitterness without escalating to outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses dissatisfaction and self-deprecating criticism. Linguistic cues include the phrase 'Deep down, I've always suspected,' which introduces a negative personal insight, followed by descriptions of an imbalanced friendship where the speaker is 'not a threat' and whose achievements are 'so far out of my reach.' This conveys a clear sense of inadequacy and quiet resentment, fitting the 'Negative' category without escalating to outrage."} |
| {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys a critical view of the publishing industry through terms like 'chaos,' 'overworked and underpaid,' and the idiom 'balls get dropped,' which collectively indicate disapproval and mild dissatisfaction without intense anger or outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Strongly Positive","justification": "The text expresses extreme satisfaction and enthusiasm. Linguistic cues include 'paroxysms of delight' (intense emotional language), 'my stamp of approval' (triumphant validation), and 'I'm a bestselling writer' (explicit self-affirmation of a significant achievement). The tone conveys excitement rather than mild approval."} |
| {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys a cynical and resigned worldview through phrases like 'never greener,' 'every author hates,' and the rejection of 'Cinderella stories' in favor of a bleak, repetitive grind. The tone expresses dissatisfaction and disillusionment with the publishing industry, fitting the Negative category without escalating to outrage or extreme frustration."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text is sarcastic and intended to express irritation and passive-aggressive cruelty. The phrase 'because I want to twist the knife' explicitly signals malicious intent, overriding the literal positive praise ('wonderfully collaborative,' 'so incisive'). The underlying emotion is spite and irritation, fitting the 'Negative' category."} |
| {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses frustration and sarcasm through the rhetorical questions 'Why doesn't anyone tell you...?' and the implied contrast between the speaker's hopeful speculation ('They must be') and the publisher's apparent indifference. This conveys dissatisfaction and criticism without intense outrage, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses anxiety, self-doubt, and fear of social rejection. Linguistic cues include catastrophic predictions ('It's all going to blow up in my face'), repeated denial of readiness ('I'm not ready'), and paranoid questioning ('Do you think everyone secretly hates me?'). The tone conveys distress and insecurity without escalating to outrage or severe fury."} |
| {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys disillusionment and frustration through phrases like 'worked my ass off' and the contrast between past hopeful effort and the present realization that 'author efforts have nothing to do with a book's success.' This expresses criticism and resigned disappointment without escalating to outrage or extreme frustration."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text uses the idiom 'raking over the coals' (a variant of 'hauling over the coals'), which denotes severe criticism or scolding. While framed as an observational statement about publishing ('rite of passage'), the metaphor explicitly compares the experience to a painful, punitive ordeal, indicating a negative sentiment toward the phenomenon described."} |
| {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses disappointment and mild bitterness through the idiom 'dead in the water,' which signifies complete failure, and the implication that Kimberly withheld painful truth out of pity ('didn't have the heart'). The tone conveys resigned criticism and personal hurt without escalating to strong outrage or fury."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys disapproval and criticism through specific linguistic choices. The phrase 'gotten in hot water' implies trouble and public backlash. The description of the tweets as 'edgy and indefensible' is explicitly judgmental, and the example quote presents the author as elitist and dismissive. The overall tone is one of mild scorn and negative characterization."} |
| {"sentiment": "Strongly Negative","justification": "The text expresses intense hostility and contempt through the direct command 'Shut up' and the dismissive, degrading phrase 'you're a dime a dozen.' This goes beyond mere dissatisfaction, conveying anger, scorn, and a desire to verbally attack or diminish the recipient."} | {"sentiment": "Strongly Positive","justification": "The text expresses extreme self-satisfaction and triumphant enthusiasm. Linguistic cues include the negative comparison to 'stilted, prewritten answers' contrasted with the effusive self-praise: 'clever, adorable, engaging.' The colloquial idiom 'I'm killing it' signifies peak performance and confidence, indicating intense positive emotion rather than mere contentment."} |
| {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys anxiety, defensiveness, and underlying guilt through the rhetorical question 'But no one ever has to know, do they?' and the emphatic capitalization of 'THE BEST WAY TO HIDE A LIE IS IN PLAIN SIGHT.' While the tone is intense and reveals internal conflict, the sentiment is one of fearful self-preservation and resentment rather than directed outrage or extreme frustration, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys frustration and anxiety about the publishing industry's opaque processes. Linguistic cues include 'dying from anticipation' (intense emotional distress), 'Gatekeepers sit on manuscripts' (critical framing of authority figures), and the contrast between mundane activities ('standing in line at Starbucks') and life-altering news, which emphasizes the power imbalance and emotional toll. The overall tone is one of weary complaint rather than neutral observation."} |
| {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses relief and a sense of security through phrases like 'I'm in the clear' and the reassurance that 'no one asks questions.' The tone conveys temporary satisfaction and freedom from anxiety, fitting the Positive category without rising to intense enthusiasm."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses schadenfreude and cynical self-awareness about enjoying others' misfortune. Linguistic cues include 'relieved that we are not part of the unfortunate masses' (explicit contrast positioning others as unfortunate), the description of publishing gossip as 'a lot of fun when you're speculating about other people's misfortune' (ironic admission of morally questionable pleasure), and the subject matter itself—layoffs and career instability. The tone is one of privileged relief tinged with guilt, fitting the 'Negative' category due to its focus on misfortune and morally dubious satisfaction."} |

Ручной анализ

| Начинающие литераторы | Литературные знаменитости |
|---|---|
| Negative | Negative |
| Negative | NegativeВ данном контексте идиома "in black and white" подчеркивает, что для Джуи успех становится значимым только тогда, когда получает внешнее подтверждение в виде списков, цифр и статуса. С точки зрения авторской интенции данный контекст следует отнести к негативному, поскольку в нём обличается зависимость героини от формального признания |
| Strongly NegativeВ данном контексте Джуи маскирует зависть и отрицание своей несостоятельности как автора словами о том, что у всех авторов такой же опыт (выражающееся через идиому "The grass is never greener on the other side"), что объективно не так, потому что существуют другие популярные авторы (например, Афина), для которых писательский путь таким не был. Сентимент "крайне негативный", так как присутствует явное критичное отношение к подобному поведению начинающих авторов (авторская перспектива-Куанг) | Strongly NegativeВ данном контексте идиома "twist the knife" сама по себе содержит выраженный компонент жестокости, поскольку обозначает намеренное усиление чужой боли ("to make someone...feel even worse" - Cambr. Dict.). Сентимент крайне негативный, так как в нём обличается сознательное стремление Джуи причинить эмоциональный вред собеседнику, что подчеркивает её агрессию |
| Negative | Strongly Negative Идиома "blow up in my face" выражает ожидание резкого и разрушительного публичного провала. Сентимент крайне негативный, поскольку в нем обличается внутренняя неуверенность Афины (при внешнем успехе она остается зависимой от чужого мнения и одобрения) |
| Negative | Strongly Negative Идиома "raking over the coals" обозначает жесткую публичную критику и соотносится с онлайн травлей. Тональность крайне негативная, так как в данном контексте обличается стремление Джуи воспринимать общественное осуждение как почти обязательный признак успеха и тем самым превращать чужую агрессию в подтверждение собственной значимости |
| Negative | Negative |
| Strongly Negative | Negative В данном контексте прослеживается самовлюбленность Джуи и ее восторг от того, что она смогла эффектно себя подать. Сентимент здесь негативный, так как в нем обличается стремление героини воспринимать способность эффектно подать себя как признак подлинного успеха |
| Negative | Negative |
| NegativeНесмотря на спокойствие/чувство безопасности главной героини, которое выражается идиомой "in the clear", стоит учитывать общий контекст (плагиат). Тогда данная фраза может быть рассмотрена как негативная, так как будет отражать критику аморальности Джуи. | Negative |

| Strongly Positive | Positive | Neutral | Negative | Strongly Negative | Всего контекстов: 69 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Всего: 3НП: 0ЛЗ: 3 | Всего: 9НП: 3ЛЗ: 6 | Всего: 4НП: 1ЛЗ: 3 | Всего: 48НП: 25ЛЗ: 23 | Всего: 5НП: 2ЛЗ: 3 | ИИ | |
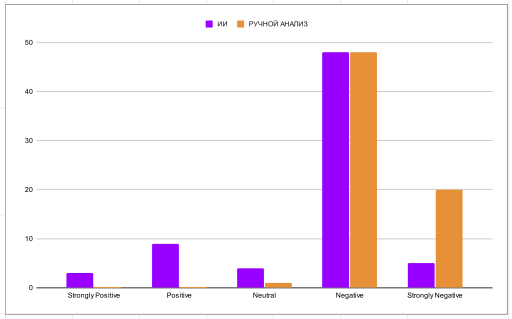
| Всего: 0НП: 0ЛЗ: 0 | Всего: 0НП: 0ЛЗ: 0 | Всего: 1НП: 0ЛЗ: 1 | Всего: 48НП: 23ЛЗ: 25 | Всего: 20НП: 8ЛЗ: 12 | Ручной анализ | Исправлений: 27 |



| | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| see the light of day (June Hayward) | Does the way that it's credited matter as much as the fact that, without me, the book might never see the light of day? I can't let Athena's greatest work go to print in its shoddy, first-draft state. | dumb (June Hayward) | It's not all about pandering to authority. I do think we've made the book better, more accessible, more streamlined. The original draft made you feel dumb, alienated at times, and frustrated with the self-righteousness of it all. It stank of all the most annoying things about Athena. The new version is a universally relatable story, a story that anyone can see themselves in. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses defensive self-justification and critical judgment through the rhetorical question that minimizes credit concerns and the harsh evaluation of Athena's work as 'shoddy, first-draft state.' The tone conveys underlying guilt, rationalization, and disapproval rather than positive or neutral sentiment."} | {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses approval and satisfaction with the revised work. Linguistic cues include positive comparative adjectives ('better, more accessible, more streamlined'), the aspirational description 'universally relatable,' and the dismissal of the original's negative qualities ('made you feel dumb,' 'stank of all the most annoying things'). While the critique of the original draft is harsh, the speaker's sentiment toward the current version is one of confident endorsement and pride."} | Strongly Negativeэпитетом shoddy Дакун принижает объективные заслуги Афины в написании романа, через что обесценивает "жертву ситуации", таким образом оправдывая себя. Идиома never see the light of day усиливает эмоциональный накал в тексте, увеличивая в глазах читателя вклад Дакун (мнимый) в работу над романом. Сентимент - крайне негативный, так как в совокупности с фактом плагиата данные языковые единицы усугубляют моральное падение Дакун. | Strongly Negative Слово прямо обозначает чувство интеллектуальной неполноценности, которое текст якобы вызывает у читателя. В данном контексте оно звучит грубо и унижительно. Здесь выясняется самооправдание Дакун, она выдает упрощение и присвоение текста за заботу о читателе |
| rub shoulders (June Hayward) | She doesn't name-drop, doesn't blurb or recommend her colleagues' books, and doesn't publicly rub shoulders in that ostentatious, desperate way early career writers do. In the entire time I've known her, I've never heard her reference any close friends but me. | softball (Juniper Song) | I'm a Serious Young Author. I'm a Literary Star. I finish reading to enthusiastic applause. The Q&A goes equally well. The questions are either softballs which give me a chance to show off ("How did you balance research for such a niche historical topic with your day job?" "How did you make the historical setting feel so rich and realized?") or baldly flattering ("How do you stay grounded while being so successful at such a young age?" "Did you feel any pressure after receiving such a major book deal?"). | {"sentiment": "Neutral","justification": "The text presents observational and descriptive statements about Athena's behavior without explicit emotional judgment. While phrases like 'ostentatious, desperate way' carry a slight negative connotation toward other writers, the overall focus remains on factual description of Athena's character traits. The tone is analytical rather than approving or disapproving, and ambiguity in the speaker's attitude toward this information warrants a Neutral classification."} | {"sentiment": "Strongly Positive","justification": "The text expresses extreme satisfaction and triumphant self-perception. Linguistic cues include the capitalized self-descriptors 'Serious Young Author' and 'Literary Star' (explicit self-aggrandizement), the description of 'enthusiastic applause' (external validation), and the characterization of Q&A questions as 'softballs' and 'baldly flattering' (perceived ease and adulation). The tone conveys a peak experience of success and recognition rather than mere contentment."} | NegativeПеречисление действий, которые характерны для многих начинающих авторов, но которые Афина в своей карьере не выполняла, выражает в первую очередь зависть самой Дакун - начинающего автора, чьи первые работы были провальными. С точки зрения авторской сатиры, данный контекст следует отнести к негативному, поскольку в нём обличается именно эта зависть гг. Эпитет ostentatious (Cambridge Dictionary помета disapproving) подчёркивает презрительное отношение Дакун к "отчаянным" начинающим писателям, но в действительности это качество присуще и ей самой. | NegativeВ данном контексте вопросы, обозначенные словом "softballs", являются не проявлением подлинного интереса к книге, а удобными подачками, позволяющими Дакун выгодно представить себя перед аудиторией. Так успех героини поддерживается средой, которая ей подыгрывает |
| leave me out in the cold (Juniper Song) | Near the end of the party, I run into my former editor while standing in line at the coat check. He comes in for a hug like we're best friends, like he didn't butcher my very first book baby, set it up to fail, and then leave me out in the cold. | picky (Harvey - producer's assistant) | "Thanks for understanding." Justin beams. "We talk to authors sometimes, and they—you know . . .""They're very picky," says Harvey. "They want every scene in the movie to match the book, word for word.""And they don't get that film is a totally different medium, and requires different storytelling skills," says Justin. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses resentment and bitter criticism through the contrast between the editor's warm greeting ('hug like we're best friends') and the speaker's recollection of mistreatment ('butcher my very first book baby,' 'set it up to fail,' 'leave me out in the cold'). The tone conveys hurt and disapproval without escalating to outrage, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys mild criticism and condescension toward authors through the dialogue. Linguistic cues include the dismissive characterization 'They're very picky' and the patronizing observation that 'they don't get that film is a totally different medium.' The speakers position themselves as professionally superior ('We talk to authors sometimes, and they—you know...'), implying frustration with authors' lack of understanding. The sentiment is negative but lacks intense outrage, fitting the 'Negative' category."} | Negative | Negative |
| throw them to the wolves." (throw to the dogs) (Daniella Woodhouse) | "I said I don't have the bag space for print books, but she could have her agent send an epub file to mine. Of course I'll never open it." Jen makes a whoosh noise with her lips. "Straight into the trash." They all chuckle. "Diplomatic," says Heidi. "Go easy on them," says Marnie. "They're not getting marketing support, poor things." "Yes, it's a real pity," sighs Daniella. "I hate watching these small presses acquire good novels just to throw them to the wolves." "It's diabolical," says Jen. | dick-measuring (Juniper Song) | Suddenly now, I'm important enough to acknowledge. Now, guys hit on me and buy me drinks at the bar. (We call bar gatherings at literary events "barcons"—watering holes for people who have been waiting all year to rub shoulders and get into dick-measuring contests over their advances and print runs.) | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses criticism and disapproval of publishing practices through phrases like 'throw them to the wolves' and 'diabolical.' While the speakers use superficially sympathetic language ('poor things,' 'real pity'), the context suggests performative concern rather than genuine distress. The sentiment conveys dissatisfaction with the industry's treatment of authors and small presses, fitting the Negative category without escalating to intense outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses cynical disillusionment with literary social culture. Linguistic cues include the sarcastic framing 'Suddenly now, I'm important enough to acknowledge' (implying prior neglect and current superficiality), the dismissive parenthetical definition of 'barcons' as venues for 'dick-measuring contests' (vulgar metaphor signaling contempt), and the focus on transactional status markers ('advances and print runs'). The tone is one of bitter observation and disapproval, fitting the 'Negative' category without escalating to outrage."} | Strongly Negative , но здесь сложно увидеть сатиру над начинающими авторами - четко прослеживается только сатира над литературной индустрией (редакторами). Но можно по контексту сказать, что Дакун во время этого обсуждения присутствовала, но не вступилась за тех, кем когда-то сама была. Это может отражать желание начинающего автора сделать все, что угодно (как в данном случае лицемерие, например), лишь бы пробиться во влиятельные круги и остаться в них. Сентимент в любом случае будет крайне негативный. | Negative |
| wannabe (Athena Liu) | Athena never made efforts to send the ladder down to her fellow writers of color. If anything, she found them annoying. "My inbox keeps filling up with wannabe writers who think I'll spend hours writing them advice letters just because we have the same vaguely ethnic background," she'd complain contemptuously. | out of touch (Juniper Song) | And on and on for sixteen tweets, culminating in a linked Google Doc with more evidence of Athena's crimes. Athena, @NoHeroesNoGods concludes, was out of touch with most radical Asian diaspora movements. Athena was not a real Marxist; she was a champagne socialist at best. Athena lied about her family history to make it seem more tragic than it was—for convenience, for claims to authenticity, for attention. Athena, like Maxine Hong Kingston, always presented the worst of Chinese history and culture to milk sympathy from her white audience. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys criticism and contempt through Athena's dismissive language ('wannabe writers,' 'vaguely ethnic background') and the narrator's framing of her behavior ('never made efforts to send the ladder down'). The tone expresses disapproval of Athena's attitude toward aspiring writers of color, fitting the Negative category without intense outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Strongly Negative","justitude": "The text conveys a sustained, vehement denunciation of Athena's character and motivations. Linguistic cues include the repetitive, damning structure of accusations ('Athena was... Athena led... Athena always presented the worst'), the use of politically charged pejoratives like 'champagne socialist,' and verbs with strong negative moral connotations ('crimes,' 'lied,' 'milk sympathy'). The sheer accumulation of evidence in 'sixteen tweets' and a linked 'Google Doc' indicates an effort to build an overwhelming case of fraud and exploitation, which reflects outrage and severe criticism."} | Negative | Strongly Negative |
| wannabe (Juniper Song) | Maybe she's one of those wannabe writers daylighting as an underpaid, overworked publishing junior staff member with a China-inspired manuscript of her own, and she's jealous I've made it big when she hasn't. I get that—in publishing, that's a universal dynamic. | had it coming (Juniper Song) | Athena is such a perfect target. She was too pretty, too successful, too suspiciously clean to have nothing on her ledger. She had it coming for her, and I'm sure some blowback like this would have happened sooner or later, even if she hadn't choked to death on a pandan pancake. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses dismissiveness and condescension through phrases like 'wannabe writers' and the cynical assumption of jealousy ('she's jealous I've made it big'). The tone conveys deferentiveness and mild contempt toward an imagined rival, fitting the Negative category without escalating to strong outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses schadenfreude and callous dismissal of Athena's death. Linguistic cues include the judgmental listing of her perceived excesses ('too pretty, too successful, too suspiciously clean'), the fatalistic justification 'She had it coming,' and the flippant reference to her cause of death ('choked to death on a pandan pancake'). The tone is cold and unsympathetic, reflecting criticism and disapproval without the heat of outrage, fitting the 'Negative' category."} | Negative | Strongly Negative В данном контексте идиома 'had it coming' передает осуждение персонажа и жестокое суждение Дакун, что Афина заслужила такую смерть. Сентимент крайне негативный, потому что в данном контексте обличается жестокость и даже зависть Дакун, она фактически оправдывает публичное уничтожение Афины и говорит о нем с удовлетворением |
| spiraling into the pits of despair (June Hayward) | Writing is such a solitary activity. You have no assurance that what you're creating has any value, and any indication that you're behind in the rat race sends you spiraling into the pits of despair. Keep your eyes on your own paper, they say. | gets dragged into the mud, (drag someone's name through the mud) (Juniper Song) | In a perverse way, this is very good for me. The more Athena gets dragged into the mud, the more confusing this whole thing seems, which undercuts the righteous authority of my detractors. Two wrongs don't make a right, obviously, but the internet is very bad at recognizing this. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses anxiety, insecurity, and pessimism about the writing process through phrases like 'no assurance that what you're creating has any value' and the metaphor 'spiraling into the pits of despair.' The reference to the 'rat race' conveys frustration and competitive pressure. While the final sentence offers a common platitude, the overall tone is one of discouragement and emotional struggle, fitting the Negative category without intense outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses cynical self-interest and moral ambivalence while observing a negative situation. Linguistic cues include the framing 'In a perverse way, this is very good for me' (acknowledgment of twisted circumstances), the metaphor 'dragged into the mud' (public disgrace), and the dismissive observation about the internet's moral reasoning ('very bad at recognizing this'). The speaker benefits from Athena's misfortune, but the tone is one of cold calculation and mild contempt rather than enthusiastic celebration, fitting the 'Negative' category due to its focus on schadenfreude and moral decay."} | Negative | Strongly Negative выражение "gets dragged into the mud" обозначает публичное унижение и серьезное повреждение репутации. Данный контекст относится к крайне негативному, потому что рассказчица воспринимает это унижение как выгодное для себя положение. |
| spike in my heart rate (June Hayward) | Jealousy is the spike in my heart rate when I glimpse news of Athena's success on Twitter—another book contract, awards nominations, special editions, foreign rights deals. | in her own right (Juniper Song) | Now Athena is a pretentious snob, a maybe-racist (no one can really make up their minds on that one), a definite Han Chinese supremacist, and a thief in her own right for her representations of Korean and Vietnamese characters. Athena is the liar, the hypocrite. Athena Liu Is Posthumously Canceled. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text explicitly names 'jealousy' as the emotional response and describes a physiological stress reaction ('spike in my heart rate') to Athena's achievements. The cataloging of successes ('book contract, awards nominations...') serves to underscore the narrator's feelings of inadequacy and resentment, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Strongly Negative","justification": "The text catalogs a series of severe public condemnations and character assassinations directed at Athena. Linguistic cues include the accumulation of damning labels ('pretentious snob,' 'maybe-racist,' 'Han Chinese supremacist,' 'thief,' 'liar,' 'hypocrite') and the conclusive, headline-like statement 'Athena Liu Is Posthumously Canceled.' The tone reflects a forceful, punitive judgment (outrage and severe criticism) rather than mild disapproval."} | Negative | Strongly Negative |
| mired by shame (June Hayward) | I'll be derailed for days, unable to focus on my own work, mired by shame and self-disgust every time I see one of her books in a bookstore display. | road to literary stardom (June Hayward) | For Athena, the Netflix deal was not a life-changing event, just another feather in her cap, one of the side perks of the road to literary stardom she's been hurtling down since graduation. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses intense personal distress through terms like 'derailed for days,' 'unable to focus,' and 'mired by shame and self-disgust.' These phrases convey deep dissatisfaction, self-criticism, and emotional turmoil in response to Athena's success. While the emotion is strong, it is directed inward (shame) rather than outward as outrage, fitting the Negative category rather than Strongly Negative."} | {"sentiment": "Neutral","justification": "The text is predominantly observational and descriptive, presenting the Netflix deal as a factual, unremarkable milestone in Athena's career trajectory. Linguistic cues such as 'not a life-changing event,' 'just another feather in her cap,' and 'side perks' downplay emotional significance, while 'hurtling down' adds mild kinetic description without clear positive or negative valence. The statement reads as a detached assessment of Athena's professional momentum rather than expressing the speaker's own sentiment about the event."} | Negative | Negative Метафора "road to literary stardom" описывает Афину как человека, который слишком легко и быстро пришел к литературной славе, и успех ее не воспринимается как результат кропотливого творческого пути, в данном контексте говорится о ее литературной звездности, к тому же все еще и омрачается завистью Дакун |
| manuscript sits like a hot sack of coals (June Hayward) | Meanwhile, in my bag, tossed at the floor of my bed, Athena's manuscript sits like a hot sack of coals. | outshines you at every turn (June Hayward) | It's hard, after all, to be friends with someone who outshines you at every turn. Probably no one else can stand Athena because they can't stand constantly failing to measure up to her. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text uses the simile 'like a hot sack of coals' to convey anxiety, guilt, and dread associated with Athena's manuscript. The imagery suggests something dangerous, uncomfortable, and burdensome that the narrator wishes to avoid or dispose of, fitting the Negative category without intense outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses resentment and insecurity through comparative self-diminishment. Linguistic cues include 'outshines you at every turn' (framing the relationship as a zero-sum competition), 'failing to measure up' (explicit inadequacy), and the speculative generalization that 'no one else can stand Athena' (projecting personal discomfort onto others). The tone is one of quiet bitterness and social alienation rather than neutral observation."} | Negative | Negative |

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| leave a hole in my life (June Hayward) | Athena was only a friend, not a close friend. I feel like a bitch saying it, but she just wasn't that important to me, and she doesn't leave a hole in my life that I now need to build detours around. I don't feel the same black, suffocating loss I did when my father died. | serial sex pest (June Hayward) | one of whom would soon be outed on Twitter as a serial sex pest, stared eagerly at her chest. "Oh myGod," she kept saying. "I'm not ready for this. It's all going to blow up in my face. I'm not ready. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses guilt, defensiveness, and emotional coldness through phrases like 'I feel like a bitch saying it' and the stark comparison to paternal loss. The speaker's admission that Athena 'wasn't that important' and 'doesn't leave a hole' carries an undercurrent of self-reproach and rationalization rather than neutrality or approval, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses anxiety, dread, and self-doubt. Linguistic cues include the repeated phrase 'I'm not ready' (explicit denial of preparedness), the catastrophic prediction 'It's all going to blow up in my face' (anticipation of public failure), and the exclamation 'Oh my God' (emotional distress). The surrounding context mentioning a 'serial sex pest' adds a layer of discomfort and grim irony, but the speaker's own sentiment remains one of fearful apprehension rather than outrage or neutrality."} | Negative | Negative |
| words burn like coals inside my chest (June Hayward) | I work so damn hard on it. I write every day from dawn to past midnight. I've never worked so hard on any writing project before, not even my debut. The words burn like coals inside my chest, fueling me, and I must pour them all out at once before they consume me. | tortured (as a "type")(June Hayward) | only from the right angles and lighting, so I tried for the next best thing, which is "tortured in avery deep and brilliant way." It's hard to transpose those thoughts to the camera, though, and the results horrified me when Melinda sent them in. | {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses intense creative drive and satisfaction through phrases like 'I work so damn hard' and the metaphor 'words burn like coals inside my chest, fueling me.' Despite the consuming, almost painful imagery, the overall tone conveys passionate engagement and a sense of purposeful energy, fitting the Positive category without escalating to extreme enthusiasm."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses dissatisfaction and self-criticism regarding the photographs. Linguistic cues include the admission of attempting a forced persona ('tortured in a very deep and brilliant way'), the difficulty of achieving the desired effect ('It's hard to transpose those thoughts to the camera'), and the strong negative reaction 'horrified me' upon seeing the results. The sentiment is one of disappointment and discomfort without escalating to outrage."} | Negative. Лишь заполучив роман Афины, которой она так завидовала, Джун действительно начала что-то делать и редактировать черновики. Эти "угли" (coals) пропитаны сатирой и мотивацией к движению вперёд, избавившись от оппонента. | Negative |
| inherited a sketch (June Hayward) | It's not so awful as it sounds. Plagiarism is an easy way out, the way you cheat when you can't string words together on your own. But what I did was not easy. I did rewrite most of the book. It's not like I took a painting and passed it off as my own. I inherited a sketch, with colors added only in uneven patches, and finished it according to the style of the original. | mere mortals (June Hayward) | Athena is so stupidly, ridiculously successful that it makes sense she wouldn't want to mingle with mere mortals. Athena, presumably, chats exclusively with blue check holders and fellow bestselling authors who can entertain her with their rarefied observations on modern society. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text reveals defensive rationalization and underlying guilt through the narrator's attempt to distinguish her actions from 'plagiarism' while simultaneously minimizing the ethical breach. Phrases like 'cheat when you can't string words together' and the need to justify the labor ('I did rewrite most of the book') convey unease and self-justification rather than neutrality or approval. The tone is defensive and uneasy, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses resentment and sarcastic criticism through exaggerated language. Linguistic cues include the intensifying adverbs 'stupidly, ridiculously' modifying 'successful' (framing achievement as excessive or absurd), the dismissive contrast between Athena and 'mere mortals' (implying elitism), and the sarcastic speculation about her exclusive social circle ('blue check holders,' 'rarefied observations'). The tone conveys bitterness and disapproval rather than neutral observation."} | Strongly Negative. т.к. это "inherited a sketch" в данном контексте является самооправданием воровства (плагиата). Более того, наблюдается моральное падение Джун. | Negative |
| sharpening gems, trimming away rough patches to let them shine (June Hayward) | The words come easily to me—revisions are usually like pulling teeth, but I'm having fun with this. I'm having more fun with writing than I have in years. Maybe because it's someone else's words I'm chopping, so I don't feel like I'm killing my darlings. Maybe because the raw material is so good, and I feel like I'm sharpening gems, trimming away the rough patches to let them shine. | punching bag (June Hayward) | Deep down, I've always suspected Athena likes my company precisely because I can't rival her. I understand her world, but I'm not a threat, and her achievements are so far out of my reach that she doesn't feel bad squealing to my face about her wins. Don't we all need someone we can treat as a punching bag? | {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses enjoyment and creative satisfaction through phrases like 'I'm having fun with this' and 'more fun with writing than I have in years.' The metaphor of 'sharpening gems' conveys a sense of productive, fulfilling work. Despite the acknowledgment of difficulty ('like pulling teeth'), the overall tone is one of pleasure and engagement, fitting the Positive category."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses self-deprecating resentment and cynical resignation. Linguistic cues include 'Deep down, I've always suspected' (introducing a painful self-awareness), the characterization of the friendship as unbalanced ('I can't rival her,' 'not a threat,' 'so far out of my reach'), and the metaphor 'punching bag' (explicitly framing herself as someone used for emotional venting). The rhetorical question 'Don't we all need someone we can treat as a punching bag?' conveys bitter irony rather than acceptance, fitting the 'Negative' category."} | Negative. Здесь показывается самовлюблённость Джун, и ключевыми словами являются "because it's someone else's words I'm chopping", хобошь эти слова - слова Афины, и она чувствует, что не несёт никакой ответственности за них. | Strongly Negative. В разговорной речи punching bag, при описании человека, является крайне унизительной формой оскорбления. Определение из Collins dictionary: informal a person serving as an object of abuse; scapegoat. Сатира закрепляется риторическим вопросом, а также заявлеэтаю Джун к Афине. |
| freed the diamond from the rough (June Hayward) | I've labored for years to learn my craft. Perhaps the core idea of this novel wasn't mine, but I'm the one who rescued it, who freed the diamond from the rough. But the thing is, no one will ever understand how much I put into this novel. | larger than life (June Hayward) | "Athena was dazzling." I say, and I do mean it. "She was larger than life. Untouchable. Looking at her was like looking at the sun. She was so brilliant that it hurt to stare for too long."I suffer through half an hour of the wake before I make up an excuse to leave—I can only take so much pungent Chinese food and old people who can't or won't speak in English. Mrs. Liu presses against me, sniffling, as I say my goodbyes. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses defensiveness, frustration, and a sense of unrecognized effort through phrases like 'no one will ever understand how much I put into this novel.' The narrator acknowledges the core idea isn't hers ('wasn't mine') but justifies her actions through self-aggrandizing metaphors ('rescued it,' 'freed the diamond from the rough'). The underlying tone is one of anxious self-justification and anticipated resentment, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text contains a stark contrast between the effusive praise for Athena and the narrator's private, dismissive thoughts about the wake. Linguistic cues for the negative sentiment include 'I suffer through half an hour,' 'I can only take so much pungent Chinese food and old people who can't or won't speak in English,' and the need to 'make up an excuse to leave.' While the quoted eulogy is 'Strongly Positive,' the surrounding narrative voice is one of discomfort, irritation, and alienation, which defines the overall sentiment of the passage."} | Strongly Negative. В данном контексте сильно выражается самооправдание, называя работу, ключевую идею которой Джун украла, алмазом. | Negative |
| well-oiled machine (Juniper Song) | So when it was my turn to release a novel, I had wild expectations that publishing would do the same thing for me and Over the Sycamore, that some well-oiled machine would build my public persona without my lifting a finger, that the marketing department would take me by the hand and coach me on precisely the right things to wear and say. | it has to gestate inside me (Athena Liu) | No beta readers. No interviews, no sharing snippets on social media. Even her agents and editors don't get to see so much as an outline until she's finished the whole thing. It has to gestate inside me until it's viable," she told me once. "If I expose it to the world before it's fully formed, it dies." | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses disappointment and disillusionment through the phrase 'wild expectations' and the implied contrast between hopeful anticipation and reality. The description of a 'well-oiled machine' and being 'coached' carries a tone of naive hope now recognized as unrealistic, conveying mild criticism and dissatisfaction without intense anger."} | {"sentiment": "Neutral","justification": "The text is a reported statement describing Athena's creative process and personal philosophy regarding her work. It presents her methodology and metaphorical justification ('gestate inside me,' 'before it's fully formed, it dies') without explicit emotional coloring from the narrator. While the imagery involves life and death stakes, the passage itself is presented as a factual recounting of Athena's words, lacking clear positive or negative sentiment indicators from the speaker's perspective."} | Negative | Neutral |
| snowballs (Juniper Song) | Brett's wrong. This won't blow over. Twitter scandals are like snowballs; the more people that see it, the more who feel it necessary to weigh in with their own opinions and agendas, creating an explosion of discourse branching off the instigating conversation. | magpie's eye for suffering (Juniper Song) | Athena had a magpie's eye for suffering. This skill united all her best-received works. She could see through the grime and sludge of facts and details to the part of the story that bled. She collected true narratives like seashells, polished them off, and presented them, sharp and gleaming, to horrified and entranced readers. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses anxiety and pessimism through the metaphor of a 'snowball' and the prediction of an 'explosion of discourse.' The dismissal of Brett's reassurance ('Brett's wrong') and the focus on escalating conflict convey worry and criticism rather than neutrality or approval, fitting the Negative category without intense outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses admiration for Athena's literary talent through vivid, approving metaphors. Linguistic cues include 'magpie's eye for suffering' (suggesting keen instinct and curation), 'see through the grime... to the part of the story that bled' (praise for penetrating insight), and 'polished them off... sharp and gleaming' (appreciation for craft). The final description of readers as 'horrified and entranced' underscores the powerful, effective impact of her work. While the subject matter involves suffering, the speaker's sentiment toward Athena's skill is one of respect and approval."} | Negative | Negative. Афина, как и Джун, так же присваивала чужой опыт себе, собирая его, как ракушки. Страдания, кровоточащие детали в истории омрачают данный контекст, показывая скрытую, настоящую натуру Афины. |
| blood in the water (Juniper Song) | The Athena-June scandal, as it's being now referred to, has become the Discourse of the Moment. This is wholly different from the Lily Wu discourse, which involved a dozen people at most. This time, there's blood in the water. Silence isn't an option. Everyone has to declare a side, or they're accused of complicity. (SMH at so many supposed allies staying silent now that their friend's been exposed, tweet anonymous accounts happily stirring the pot.) | dead muse (June Hayward) | Athena, the dead muse. And I, the grieving friend, haunted by her spirit, unable to write without invoking her voice. See, who ever said I wasn't a good storyteller? | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text describes a public controversy using dramatic, predatory metaphors like 'blood in the water' and notes the forced polarization ('Everyone has to declare a side, or they're accused of complicity'). The parenthetical 'SMH' (shaking my head) expresses disapproval of silent allies, while 'stirring the pot' criticizes anonymous instigators. The overall tone conveys anxiety, criticism of social dynamics, and the narrator's feeling of being trapped in a volatile situation, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses self-satisfaction and ironic amusement at the narrator's own narrative framing. Linguistic cues include the theatrical, self-aware construction 'Athena, the dead muse. And I, the grieving friend' (romanticizing the situation), followed by the rhetorical question 'See, who ever said I wasn't a good storyteller?' which signals pride and cleverness. The sentiment is one of smug approval rather than genuine grief or enthusiasm, fitting the 'Positive' category due to its self-congratulatory tone."} | Strongly Negative. Здесь Джун отсылается на ситуацию с Лили Ву, которая была негативной, а у неё она куда хуже, и "blood in the water" и (но её именно) "отсутствие права воздержания в принятии стороны" это ярко подчеркивает. | Negative. Оправдание, также негативный эффект придаёт "нейтральг" муза, т.к. Афина буквально мертва. При этом Джун понимает, что просто украла её роман. |
| sticking my head in the sand (Juniper Song) | Jen keeps reminding me. What's on the internet can't hurt you if you don't look at it. But it doesn't feel like a cleanse; it feels like sticking my head in the sand while everything is falling down around me. I can't ignore the damage. I have to track the exact trajectory of the hurricane, because knowing the precise moment it'll hit and where will make things hurt less. At least, my brain is convinced this is so. | eating her heart out (Marnie Kimball) | The nominations trickle in one by one: Goodreads Choice Awards, check; the Indies Choice Book Awards, check. The Booker Prize and the Women's Prize are long shots, so I'm not too disappointed when I don't make the short list for those. Besides, I'm nominated for so many regional awards that I'm swimming in attention regardless. Adele Sparks-Sato is eating her heart out, texts Marnie when I share the Goodreads Choice Awards news. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses anxiety, helplessness, and compulsive distress through metaphors like 'sticking my head in the sand' and 'track the exact trajectory of the hurricane.' The narrator rejects reassurance ('Jen keeps reminding me') and describes a state of hypervigilance driven by fear of impending disaster. The tone conveys significant emotional turmoil and dissatisfaction without escalating to explicit outrage, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses satisfaction and pride regarding award nominations, tempered by realistic expectations. Linguistic cues include the casual, confident listing of achievements ('check; the Indies Choice Book Awards, check'), the pragmatic acceptance of missing major prizes ('long shots, so I'm not too disappointed'), and the celebratory detail of 'swimming in attention.' The inclusion of the schadenfreude-laced text ("Adele Sparks-Sato is eating her heart out") adds a layer of smug pleasure, confirming a positive, self-satisfied sentiment overall."} | Negative | Strongly negative Это активная, токсичная радость от чужого страдания |
| gum-chewing, braces-wearing (June Hayward) | My boss is annoyed, and the parents who booked me are understandably pissed, but I cannot sit in a windowlessroom and go over multiple-choice reading comprehension answers with gum-chewing, braces-wearing brats right now. I simply cannot. "Last weekI watched a friend thrash around on the ground until she died," I snap whena student's mother calls me to complain. | linger in development hell (Juniper Song) | I try to temper my expectations. After all, the vast majority of options deals go nowhere. All that an option means is that the production company has exclusive rights to package the story into something a studio might want to buy. The vast majority of projects linger in development hell, and very few ever get green-lit by studio executives. | {"sentiment": "Strongly Negative","justification": "The text conveys intense emotional distress and anger through the pejorative description of students as 'gum-chewing, braces-wearing brats,' the emphatic refusal ('I simply cannot'), and the explosive, traumatic retort ('I snap') recounting a friend's violent death. This language reflects outrage, severe frustration, and a complete breakdown of composure, fitting the Strongly Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Neutral","justification": "The text is a factual, cautionary explanation of how options deals function in the publishing and film industries. Linguistic cues include the pragmatic self-admonition 'I try to temper my expectations' and the objective, statistical framing ('vast majority,' 'very few'). The tone is one of sober realism intended to manage potential disappointment, lacking clear positive or negative emotional expression about the current situation."} | Strongly Negative | Negative.Она учит себя «сдерживать ожидания» — это защитный механизм, а не нейтральное наблюдение |

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| mass (June Hayward) | Brett doesn't get back to me until Thursday, when he lets me know he's reserved the weekend for having a look. I can't tell if he means it, or if he's stalling so that I won't bother him. By the time the next Monday rolls around, I'm a mass of anxiety. Every minute feels like an eternity. I've paced outside my apartment block a million times, and I've resorted to leaving my phone in my microwave so that I'm not tempted to check it all the time | multimedia empire (Juniper Song) | I got my embarrassingly large advance. I got my bestseller status, my major magazine profiles, my prizes and honors. Now, with the sickly sweet taste of the Miss Saigon lingering on my tongue, all that feels paltry in comparison to what true literary stardom looks like. I want what Stephen King has, what Neil Gaiman has. Why not a movie deal? Why not Hollywood stardom? Why not a multimedia empire? Why not the world? | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses acute anxiety, insecurity, and frustration through phrases like 'I can't tell if he means it,' 'I'm a mass of anxiety,' and 'Every minute feels like an eternity.' The description of compulsive pacing and hiding the phone in the microwave to resist checking it conveys emotional distress and lack of control. The tone is one of worried dissatisfaction rather than outrage, fitting the Negative category."} | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses dissatisfaction and restless ambition despite acknowledged achievements. Linguistic cues include the dismissive framing of prior successes ('embarrassingly large advance,' 'paltry in comparison'), the negatively charged sensory detail ('sickly sweet taste of the Miss Saigon'), and the escalating, frustrated rhetorical questions ('Why not a movie deal?... Why not the world?'). The sentiment conveys envy and discontent rather than contentment or enthusiastic satisfaction."} | Negative | Negative |
| curt, impersonal (June Hayward) | but he at least answers all my emails within the week and hasn't lied to me about my royalties or the state of my rights, which you hear horror stories about all the time. Sure, I feel awkward and embarrassed reading curt, impersonal emails like Hi June, so the publisher won't be taking your book to paperback because they aren't sure it'll keep selling, or Hey June, so no one's biting on the audio rights front, so I'm going to take it off submission for now; just wanted to keep you updated. | swimming in attention (Juniper Song) | The Booker Prize and the Women's Prize are long shots, so I'm not too disappointed when I don't make the short list for those. Besides, I'm nominated for so many regional awards that I'm swimming in attention regardless. | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text conveys resigned disappointment and mild criticism through the contrast between minimal professional decency ('hasn't lied to me') and the painful content of the 'curt, impersonal emails' about the book's commercial failure. The speaker's feelings of being 'awkward and embarrassed' and the quoted rejections ('won't be taking your book to paperback,' 'no one's biting') express dissatisfaction and frustration without intense outrage."} | {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses contentment and self-assurance despite a minor disappointment. Linguistic cues include the pragmatic acceptance 'so I'm not too disappointed' and the buoyant, confident imagery of 'swimming in attention.' The tone is one of satisfied perspective rather than intense excitement or neutral observation."} | Negative | Negative Высмеивается стремление популярного автора получить внимание публики, независимо от того, заслужено ли оно и подкреплено ли какими-то наградами(более менее объективными маркерами оценки работ), поэтому данный контекст следует отнести к negative. |
| | | crowd of angry voices converging on me to rip pieces of flesh (Juniper Song) | I imagine a crowd of angry voices and pointed fingers, converging on me to rip pieces of flesh from my body like the naiads did to Orpheus, until all that's left is the prurient, whispered question, 'Did you hear about Juniper Song?' and fragments of rumors growing darker and more distorted; bloody, decomposing shreds of my virtual identity; until there is nothing left but the statement, justified or not, that Juniper Song Is Canceled. | | {"sentiment": "Strongly Negative","justification": "The text expresses intense fear and catastrophic anticipation of public destruction. Linguistic cues include the violent mythological metaphor 'rip pieces of flesh from my body like the naiads did to Orpheus,' the visceral imagery of 'bloody, decomposing shreds of my virtual identity,' and the fatalistic conclusion 'Juniper Song Is Canceled.' The tone conveys extreme distress and a sense of impending annihilation, fitting the 'Strongly Negative' category."} | | Strongly Negative |
| | | bougie (June Hayward) | She's decorated it in that ubiquitous, Instagram-famous style that screams minimalist but bougie: sleek wooden furniture, sparely designed bookshelves, and clean, monochrome carpets. Even the plants look expensive. | | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses mild disdain and critique of the decor style through sarcastic and dismissive language. Linguistic cues include 'ubiquitous, Instagram-famous style' (implying unoriginality and trend-chasing), the verb 'screams' (suggesting loud, tasteless signaling), and the ironic juxtaposition 'minimalist but bougie' (mocking pretentiousness). The final observation 'Even the plants look expensive' carries a tone of weary, cynical observation, fitting the 'Negative' category."} | | Negative |
| | | stupidly, ridiculously successful (June Hayward) | In the entire time I've known her, I've never heard her reference any close friends but me. I used to think that she was simply aloof. Athena is so stupidly, ridiculously successful that it makes sense she wouldn't want to mingle with mere mortals. Athena, presumably, chats exclusively with blue check holders and fellow bestselling authors who can entertain her with their rarefied observations on modern society. | | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses resentment and sarcastic criticism through exaggerated, dismissive language. Linguistic cues include the intensifying adverbs 'stupidly, ridiculously' modifying 'successful' (framing achievement as excessive or absurd), the condescending contrast between Athena and 'mere mortals' (implying elitism), and the sarcastic speculation about her exclusive social circle ('blue check holders,' 'rarefied observations'). The tone conveys bitterness and disapproval rather than neutral observation or genuine admiration."} | | Negative |
| | | queer (June Hayward) | Or perhaps not arbitrary, but it hinges on factors that have nothing to do with the strength of one's prose. Athena—a beautiful, Yaleeducated, international, ambiguously queer woman of color—has been chosen by the Powers That Be. Meanwhile, I'm just brown-eyed, brownhaired June Hayward, from Philly—and no matter how hard I work | | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses resentment and perceived injustice regarding literary success being determined by identity rather than merit. Linguistic cues include the dismissive framing of factors 'that have nothing to do with the strength of one's prose,' the capitalized, quasi-mythical 'Powers That Be' (suggesting opaque, unfair gatekeeping), and the self-diminishing contrast between Athena's exoticized descriptors ('beautiful, Yale-educated, international, ambiguously queer woman of color') and the speaker's plain self-description ('just brown-eyed, brown-haired June Hayward, from Philly'). The trailing 'no matter how hard I work' emphasizes futility and bitterness, fitting the 'Negative' category."} | | Negative |
| | | pompous, juvenile, or sanctimonious (June Hayward) | She has the confidence, the understated and lyrical prose necessary to tell such a heavy story without coming across as pompous, juvenile, or sanctimonious. Most grand war epics by young writers tend to read like mere imitations of grand war epics | | {"sentiment": "Positive","justification": "The text expresses clear admiration and praise through complimentary descriptors like 'confidence,' 'understated and lyrical prose,' and the favorable contrast with 'mere imitations' produced by other young writers. The tone conveys approval and respect for the subject's skill without intense enthusiasm, fitting the Positive category."} | | Strongly negativeКаждое сказанное положительное слово — это зависть и боль, а не радость |
| | | overhyped and disappointing (June Hayward) | It would never have been published, or if it had, in its current state, it would always have been known as Athena's half-finished manuscript, as overhyped and disappointing as F. Scott Fitzgerald's The Last Tycoon. I gave it a chance to go out into the world without the judgment that multiple authorship always entails | | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text expresses defensive self-justification and criticism of Athena's work through negative comparisons ('half-finished,' 'overhyped and disappointing'). The narrator positions herself as a rescuer while dismissing the original author's potential, and the reference to 'judgment that multiple authorship always entails' reveals underlying anxiety about legitimacy. The tone conveys unease and rationalization rather than positive or neutral sentiment."} | | Negative |
| | | juicy (June Hayward) | So perhaps we can view this as Athena's great literary prank, as my complicating the reader-author relationship in a way that will provide juicy fodder for scholars for decades to come. Okay—perhaps that last one is a bit of a stretch. | | {"sentiment": "Negative","justification": "The text employs dark humor and self-deprecating rationalization to reframe a troubling situation ('Athena's great literary prank,' 'juicy fodder for scholars'). The parenthetical admission 'Okay—perhaps that last one is a bit of a stretch' undermines the attempted positivity, revealing that the speaker does not genuinely believe the optimistic spin. The underlying tone is one of uneasy justification and awareness of moral ambiguity, fitting the Negative category."} | | Negative |

| |
|---|
| Идиомы (26) |
| Метафоры (26) |
| Эпитеты + разговорные слова и слова сниженной лексики (17) |